Since retiring from Queen's I have:-

- Published papers in peer-reviewed journals with three members of the School of Psychology at Queens (and others)
- Attempted to raise the profile of the School of Psychology by mentioning it favourably in my recent books. These are well-reviewed and influential. Researchers, home and international students who read them will recognise Queen's as a centre of excellence for postgraduate research in my field of psychology (which it still is).
- Relied on access to the Web of Science to support my writing, editorial and reviewing work.
- Successfully nominated two members of academic staff from the School of Psychology as associate editors of international journals.
- Brought a major international conference to Queen's in 2023.
- Attended several (6?) British Council events (without payment) to promote the School of Psychology to Canadian and US school students between 2012-2014.

Above all, I enjoy keeping abreast of research – as personal development to keep my brain active in older age.
